

Would you rather grow your follower count, or be honest?

WRITTEN ON A FRUSTRATED AFTERNOON

SWIPE →

I'm torn between two ways to post online.

Path one

Show only the good bits. Make everything look aspirational.

Path two

Show everything I tried that didn't work, without a silver lining.

On paper I might look successful, but a lot of the time I don't feel it.

Why is it so hard to be happy with what we already have?

It's the constant comparison.

On Lenny's podcast, a billionaire said there's always someone with a bigger yacht. That's why so many of them are miserable.

It never stops, at any level.

So I closed the apps and went for a walk. And I asked myself something I'd forgotten to ask:
why am I doing all of this?

To help women benefit more from technology.

And an honest picture of building a business helps more than the shiny façade.

So I'm curious. What do you like reading more: advice from people who have huge follower counts and have figured it out, or honest accounts of what didn't work and the unsuccessful bits?

I worked through all of this in real time in the article.

productkind.substack.com

Full article on Substack 💜

Know someone tired of the highlight reel? Send them this.